“ Greg, you left us suddenly, and with broken hearts, No promise of returning to us, but a part of us went with you. Our family chain is broken, Nothing will ever be the same. I have a letter you wrote me in 1987, you said, "I am coming home, Jane, aint you happy". Well, you are at home now Greg, and I know "You Are Happy". I'll cherish your letter- until I join you. “ Greg,

It is odd the things that stick out in a person's mind about someone. I keep thinking of when I came by your house a few years ago and you had that tiny little kitten that you were feeding every couple of hours with an eye dropper. I remember you saying it was getting on your nerves because it kept waking you up and you would have to feed it, but the next time I came by it was a big cat that kept rubbing against your legs. Not everybody would have done that, Greg. You had a good heart and that's what I am going to remember about you. After MawMaw's funeral, we walked across the cemetery to where they would bury her, you were one of about two people who told me that I had done a good job speaking at her funeral and that you were glad I did it. I remember I said, "I don't know, Greg. I think everyone is mad." and you said, " You did good. To Hell with what they think." I won't ever forget that. For 12 years, I sent out dozens of Christmas letters to people and almost every year, you would call me the night you got it and tell me thank you for sending you one. Nobody else ever did that, except you. That meant something to me. The first time I ever drove a car at night was with you. In that red 240SX that you used to have. You and I had gone to town to get something for Mawmaw and when we started back, you handed me the keys and told me to drive. I told you I hadn't driven at night and you said it was time to start. You were unique and didn't mince words. I can relate to that and always respected that about you. I loved you, Greg and I know that you know I did because I told you and I know you loved me. I'll see you when I get there.

“ Although it is extremely painful for everyone here, I know you are in a better place. Over the years that I was able to see you I remember the smile that you had. You will be missed and never forgotten. Rest easy Greg, I'm sending thoughts and prayers for your family. I love you all.

“ Rest in comfort Greg. My mom has told me numerous childhood stories of yours from her babysitting days as a young aunt. Living states away didn't allow for us to know each other very well as cousins but you and your family have always and will continue to be in my thoughts. Maw Maw and Paw Paw must be happy to be with you again.
