“ I so enjoyed my time working with Robert. His classroom and office was next to mine for quite some time. He was so kind and had the most wonderful sense of humor. It tickled him when students thought he was tough and intimidating. I well remember him chuckling and saying, "That's what they need to think." In truth he cared for his students and I inadvertently overheard him go out of way to help students over and again. The last time I saw him was his last official day on campus. I started to say goodbye and tell him how much I enjoyed working with him. He shook his head, looked a bit misty eyed, smiled, and said "Don't." I heard similar encounters took place with others. He wasn't going to let anyone be emotional. But, we all knew why. That was so very like him. He is still thought of fondly by those of us who worked with him.
