“ Where do you begin to write about Stacy? While I spent very little face to face time with him, we did have our occasions and phone calls. The first time I met him, I realized he was incredibly intelligent as he could discuss anything - besides Alabama football! I always thought he would be a great author- there was a book hiding in him just waiting to be written. He was handsome, kind, thoughtful, loving , a musician who could play the "hair" off an organ and a quiet instigator who knew exactly what buttons to push on the little Red head that flitted around him keeping him line- Mary Catherine. He came to Norfolk Southern's Christmas family day years ago and played Christmas music while we decorated the lobby. He could truly play anything and love to play. On another occasion he came to my house for a retirement party and I thought if I had asked, he would have moved in as he could have sat in front of the large windows and gazed at the Atlanta skyline for hours. On the phone, we could talk forever as if we were highschool friends catching up. While Mary Catherine shared her life with us, we knew Stacy and all the family- and she shared our lives with him. Countless times he became an expert on questions related to nothing or everything as it wasn't uncommon to call him and ask him to research something. I could write on and on about him to celebrate his life as he truly was a remarkable man. I am sure he will be missed and always leave a void in Mary Catherine's life as she has said a million times "God knows I love him!" I am fortunate to have been able to call him my friend and for his family sharing him with me. Bless you all.
