Susan was a beautiful and sweet lady. I worked with her at the hospital and she was always kind and smiling. I still have the lantern she gave me when my mother passed away. Praying for her sons and her family.

“ No!

I met Susan when she was working at McDonald's and MZH. I was going through a divorce I wasn't but a couple years older than her at the time. But she saved my life. She became my roommate.

We had some friends in common, when they would visit we would call her " Marilyn" because that smile and that short blonde hairstyle we would laugh and laugh.

We got iced in that year and this lady walked to her job at McDonald's. (She was always serious about working)

That's when she got pregnant with I believe Xavier (the eldest). We had overhead plumbing so of course our water froze we boiled snow for baths and everything she made some of the best snow cream I've ever tasted.

She moved bc the baby was coming and I decided to move to Birmingham so I didn't see her for years I talked to her couple times on the phone. And our mutual friends were now my roommates. Every once in a while they would see her or chat giving me all the updates.

Untill One of our mutual friends passed away, she came to his celebration of life and she was so tiny. But bubbly just like in the mid 90's

I talked to her online a few years ago but I was busy with life as was she but we promised we would go to lunch together soon.

We never did. I don't think Susan ever knew that she literally saved my life the night before I overheard her talking about finding a place to move I was on the phone with suicide hotline I was a mess I didn't know how to Carry on bc Allan and I had been together so long we grew up together basically. May God rest his soul. But Susan showed me and lived every minute making it worthwhile I love that lady more than she'll ever know.

My heart is shattered for her boys and sisters, dad. Can't forget those Pennsylvania friends of hers always on phone chattering Away.

Susan please grab Carl and Allan tell them we love them and you so much.

*And Susan tysvm for saving and showing me life was worth living.
